

Corr wedding helps golf plan tee off

LAST week's announcement of a new "residential interest ownership" scheme at Doonbeg, the five-star west Clare golf resort, was timely.

Doonbeg is in the news internationally this weekend as the location of the lavish nuptial celebrations of Andrea Corr and Brett Desmond, son of the financier Dermot.

We are assured that residential interest ownership is not a timeshare by any other name. Those prepared to cough up €165,000 get a one-tenth "deeded interest" in a cottage in a new "residence club", known as the Links Cottages at Doonbeg. They get bonuses including access to other posh properties run by Timber Resorts, the US company running the scheme and described as "the leading developer of intimate luxury resort properties".

The word on the golfing grapevine is that the K Club is planning to launch something similar in September.

It's all good news for those finding it hard just now to finance the champagne Charlie lifestyle.
